When it comes to your skin, it can seem like water would never be bad for it. We drink it in our morning smoothie, after all. But there are things that can harm our skin's moisture barrier, and water's one of them, potentially causing dry, scaly and flaky skin. The good news is, it's easy to guard against water damage in your skin. Research shows that a number of factors can cause your skin to lose its water barrier, including stress, pregnancy, cosmetics, diet and even how much you sweat. So next time you drink a glass of water during your morning coffee, you can be sure that no harm will come to your skin 388ed7b0c7

* Select. Select allows you to select a specific pixel, or a group of pixels, within an image. You can select pixels by clicking around a specific area of the image, just like you would with a paintbrush. You can also click a group of pixels to select the entire area, or press Ctrl (+) to select only the pixels that are part of a specified shape. Using the Brush tool, the Select tool, and the eraser or Clone Stamp, you can create some pretty complex images. But if you aren't careful, you may find yourself in a confusing spiral of repetitive actions. To combat this, Photoshop has a helpful feature called Do Over. You can use this feature to undo mistakes without losing the original effect you created. The three most useful steps for getting started with Do Over are `_Save`, `_Undo_`, and `_Redo_`.

* Save. Click the down-pointing arrow next to the Save button on the Edit menu. The Save dialog box opens (Figure 9-4, top). In the Save as Type menu, you see two options: Save for Web and Save for Web. The Save for Web option is for images you want to post to the web. The Save for Web option offers you several size choices, as well as file compression formats for your files. The Save As dialog box shown here has the same basic structure, and you can use it to perform the same tasks as the Save dialog box. For example, you can change the file name or type.

* Undo. This one's easy: Click the arrow next to the Undo button on the Edit menu. A series of red-circled buttons appears, as shown in Figure 9-4. The word `_Undo_` appears in the upper-left corner of the first button.

* Redo. The Redo button is similar to the Undo button, but it reverses the last action in your image. In other words, after you Redo one action, you are left with the original image (instead of the image you just changed). However, you may notice that the Redo button has two values: Redo Original and Redo Previous. The Redo Original option doesn't use the Undo button. Instead, it uses the same Undo button (pictured here), but lets you undo the last `_row_` of changes, not just the last action.

What's New In?

Established in 2004 by Michael Sternra, iDecor was launched to fill a void in the luxury home decor market for one of the more misunderstood economies of the world, namely, Europe. The growth of iDecor has been nothing less than meteoric as the company has grown from an unknown company in Northern Italy to a multi-million dollar company with more than 500,000 customers and sold over one million products in 2010. With increased popularity and exponential growth since 2010, iDecor is now bringing products to the United States and Canada. With recent years of growth also comes a new wave of savvy clients who demand nothing less than the most sought after items in the home decor market. It is no wonder that customers are continually increasing their orders with repeat customers placing extra orders as they “grab what’s hot” before it disappears from the markets. iDecor is fortunate to attract the attention of the press and other notable companies for publicity and endorsements. The company has received an array of awards and accolades for iDecor’s service and product offerings including the prestigious 2012 “Favorite” award for “Service” in the prestigious “Travelers Choice Awards”. iDecor, Inc. has also received numerous “Award of Excellence” awards from the International Association of Home Inspectors (IAHI), North American Hardware Manufacturers Association (NAHMA) and the International Home Awards. “iDecor’s Unique Product Designs Win Worldwide Awards”, an article in the December 2010, issue of Industria Newsletter, noted how “iDecor moved into being one of the leading global home decor companies” in the “10 Top Home Decor Companies”, as published in the August 2010 issue of Popular Mechanics.
